ChatGPT is a popular tool that helps people write texts, find answers, and learn new things. While it can be helpful in many ways, there are also some negative impacts that we need to think about, especially for students and young users.

First, using ChatGPT too often can make people lazy to think. When students use it to do all their homework or assignments, they don't practice their own writing or thinking skills. This can make it harder for them to learn and improve because they depend too much on the tool.

Second, ChatGPT is not always 100% correct. Sometimes, the answers or information it gives are not true or are outdated. If users do not check the facts, they might believe something that is wrong. This can lead to confusion or problems, especially at school or at work.

Third, using ChatGPT without understanding the topic can stop people from developing real knowledge. Learning is more than just copying answers. It is about understanding, asking questions, and finding solutions by ourselves.

In conclusion, even though ChatGPT can be a useful tool, we must use it wisely. It should support our learning, not replace our thinking. We need to stay active in learning and always double-check the information we get from any source, including ChatGPT.

- Ukasyah : Have you heard about the new hydropower project in our district?
 Fathiyah : Oh yeah, they're building it near that big ditch, right?
 Ukasyah : Exactly! They're harnessing the power of flowing water to generate electricity. It's a cool way to produce energy without environmental limitations.
 Fathiyah : That's awesome! We really need more renewable energy sources. How does hydropower work, though?
 Ukasyah : It's pretty cool. They build a dam in the river, creating a reservoir. When they release water from the dam, it flows through turbines, and that movement generates electricity.
 Fathiyah : It's like using nature's flow to power up our homes. No wonder it's considered green energy.
 Ukasyah : You got it! And the best part is, it doesn't rely on weather conditions like solar or wind power. It's more consistent.
 Fathiyah : By the way, did you see the huge tarpaulin they've set up around the construction site?
 Ukasyah : Yeah, they're probably using it to control erosion and protect the soil from running into the river during construction.
 Fathiyah : Smart move. We want clean energy, but we also want to keep our environment clean.

First of all, online shopping can easily lead to overspending. With attractive advertisements, flash sales, and the ease of making transactions, people often buy more than they actually need. Another issue is related to data security. Not all online platforms are safe. Some websites may misuse personal data or trick users into fraudulent transactions. Therefore, shoppers must be cautious and ensure they only use trusted platforms.

To avoid these problems, people must use online shopping wisely. It is important to plan purchases, set a shopping budget, and always evaluate whether the item is truly needed.
