What makes it worse is they don't know how to talk to people face-to-face! Still, those are not what worry me most. It is the pressure behind the screen. Part 3

Questions 19 to 26 are based on the following passage.

Read the passage carefully and choose the best answer A, B, C or D.

For each question, mark your answer on the answer sheet.

Lina stood in the crowded airport; her phone lifted in front of her face. Around her, travellers searched for their respective gates, but she only paid attention to the screen. Lina adjusted her hair, tilted her chin, and waited for the camera to come into focus. Only when the shot looked perfect did she smile. Her first solo trip abroad deserved a flawless beginning and a picture to remember it.

Lina had dreamed of visiting Santorini since childhood. A postcard on her grandmother's refrigerator had captured her attention. There was a scribble on the left-hand side, a message from an uncle who had gone for a trip. The picture next to it, of whitewashed houses going down cliffs bordering a brilliant blue sea, looked timeless and peaceful. Social media later reintroduced the island with shots of clear waters and navy-blue domes against glowing sunsets. Upon finishing her degree, there was only one destination for her graduation trip—Lina looked forward to the place of her dreams to celebrate her freedom.

Once Lina landed in Athens, she took a taxi to the port for her ferry. Along the way, she noticed crowds of tourists and various tour buses shuttling people from one attraction to another. She sighed at the sight outside the window before settling back in her seat, relieved that she was spending her vacation somewhere else, away from all the hustle and bustle. She was confident her trip would be picture perfect.

What she saw at the jetty took Lina by surprise, however. There were so many boats, and even more people wandered around, waiting to board them. Surely, they all could not be going to the same place, Lina reassured herself. Greece had many islands, after all. Her heart sunk, unfortunately, when she saw a long line had already formed in front of her ferry, all headed for the same destination. With a deep breath, Lina pulled on her luggage to join the end of the queue.

The ferry ride felt longer than expected. Though Lina had booked a cabin, it was small and shared with another traveller. The deck was worse—packed with people talking loudly, taking photos, and scrolling on their phones. Everywhere she turned, screens glowed brighter than the sea. Feeling overwhelmed, Lina returned to her bunk and slept as the boat rocked through the waves.

When Lina awoke, her cabinmate was no longer there—the ferry had arrived. Stepping onto solid ground, Lina could not wait to escape from it all and be comfortably relaxed in her hotel room. Getting off the ferry took some time and she had to push her way through the shuffling crowd towards a taxi. By the time she finally stepped into the hotel room, exhaustion had replaced excitement. Still, Lina forced herself to stay hopeful. She had booked her stay for a week.

The next morning, Lina woke up early to get ready and quickly set out, camera in hand, ready to explore the area. By now, she sort of knew what to expect. The tight pathways were already crowded shoulder to shoulder. The beach was lined with mats and umbrellas, the water full of swimmers. Lina turned toward the market, but souvenir shops barely had any items left, and eateries overflowed with diners before noon. That evening, as the sun sank into the sea, Lina sat among the crowd gathered at the sea wall. But what hit her hard was how many were still glued to their phone screens despite the magnificent scene right in front of them.

Over the next few days, Lina noticed details you did not see on postcards and social media posts—overflowing trash bins, water-shortage signs, and litter buried in the sand. One day, Lina came across a notice about a beach clean-up. When she showed up, a local passed her a trash bag and she immediately got to work. The amount of waste they collected after only an hour left her feeling uneasy, almost ashamed. When Lina returned home, friends asked if Santorini lived up to its reputation. She remained silent at first, then confessed, "It was very extraordinary; but also so very fragile." Lina kept her grandmother's postcard, now faded, a reminder that travel is not only about chasing beauty—it is also about protecting it.

Part 4

Questions 27 to 32 are based on an article about health tourism.

Six sentences have been removed from the article. Choose the correct sentence A - H the one which fits each gap (27 to 32). There are two extra sentences which you do not need to use. Mark your answer on the answer sheet.

Health Tourism

Imagine waking up in a new city, but instead of visiting a museum, you are heading to a world-class hospital for a check-up. In recent years, millions of people have travelled across borders to seek treatment or improve their well-being, making healthcare tourism an attractive alternative.

In many countries, patients have to wait for months for procedures such as joint replacements or specialised scans. 27 Delays can affect both patients' emotional well-being and cause stress on family members who care for them during this period.

Due to increasing demand, some Asian countries such as Thailand, India, and Malaysia have spent more money on modern medical technology and hospitals making treatments affordable. 28 Follow-up care is also cheaper because the cost of healthcare and accommodation is lower, allowing them to stay longer and recover more comfortably.

Besides cost, privacy is also an important factor. Cosmetic surgeries may not be accepted in some communities, so patients often choose to seek treatment overseas. 29 Emotional and social factors can be just as important as financial considerations when patients decide to travel for medical care.

Despite the benefits, there are also some issues to consider. Patients should conduct proper research before getting treatment overseas. 30 In some cases, insurance coverage for treatment abroad may be limited, which can make the total expenses uncertain.

31 Some doctors may not follow proper standards or may lack experience. As a precaution, make sure they have a good reputation for doing the procedure. If something goes wrong, it may be difficult to take legal action. Patients may also have problems with follow-up care after returning home.

Still, medical tourism keeps growing. Online marketing, special agencies, and easier visa processes make it simpler to arrange treatment overseas. 32 As a result, they provide special visas to attract foreign patients.

Overall, travelling abroad for treatment offers advantages such as accessibility and affordability, but careful consideration of potential challenges is necessary to ensure safe, effective, and informed decisions.

SULIT

A	Another worry is not many people realise the risks involved in the actual medical procedure.	E	This allows them to avoid negative judgement from friends and family.
B	The governments of these countries offer fast-track approval for medical purposes so treatments are not delayed.	F	Governments also see the economic benefit that health tourism brings to their country.
C	Lower prices and good exchange rates make these countries popular choices for patients.	G	They should be aware of hidden costs that may not be mentioned in brochures.
D	Non-urgent surgeries are often pushed back in busy healthcare systems.	H	Family members might disapprove of the decision despite the doctor's expertise.

Part 5

Questions 33 to 40 are based on the following texts.

Read the texts carefully and answer the questions that follow.

Influencer ReviewsA – AMIRA LAYLA

Amira Layla's baking videos are full of cheerful laughter and bright colours, making her followers happy. Although some think her tutorials are slightly rushed, her warm attitude makes the learning experience lively. There is nothing particularly special about her recipes, but her overall effort keeps people coming back for more.

B – BAZLI KHIR

Bazli Khir focuses on business opportunities, and although his explanations are clear, his presentation style feels rather ordinary. Filming in the busy business area makes the background attractive, but it can be noisy and distracting. Still, he tries his best to upload frequently and covers trending business ideas, making his page a favourite among those who want quick current updates.

C – CHRISTINA ANN

Christina Ann's travel reels initially look colourful, as she focuses on spectacular and dramatic destinations. But, the excitement fades. Her storytelling lacks depth, and many clips feel repetitive. Some mentions that she responds to questions quite slowly. Though she does her best to interact with her audience, the overall experience feel dull.

D – DAVID TAN

Some might say David Tan's fashion reviews deserve low ratings because he shoots from his room and the decor looks outdated. His lighting also needs a serious makeover to achieve a more modern look. Surprisingly, his styling tips are excellent—fresh, practical and easy to follow. Even though the background is boring, his advice is useful, so people often revisit his page just for the outfits.

E – EIMAN NUR

Eiman Nur's lifestyle posts are simple but pleasant. Her home-decor videos are neat and memorable. While she tries to stay energetic in her daily live streams, she is not very attentive to feedback, and tends to overlook the comments by viewers. However, with short and easy-to-watch clips, she becomes a preferred choice among home-makers.

F – FARHAN AZIZ

Farhan Aziz is well known for testing exotic food especially viral ones, which in itself is really appealing to viewers. But that isn't the main things that draws the online community to his channel. What strikes you first is the cosy, friendly feel of his character that comes through in his videos. He speaks calmly, replies politely, and always makes others feel welcome. The enthusiasm he creates is the reason many people return again and again.
