Robert Pattinson

Robert Pattinson is famous for films such as Twilight and The Batman but he almost didn't become an actor.

Robert was born in London in 1986. When he was growing up, his main interest was music. He started learning the piano at the age of four and the guitar when he was five. As a teenager, he loved writing songs and he was in a band for a few years. Later, he performed alone in small concerts. He was thinking about becoming a musician.

At school, Robert's drama teacher didn't think he was a good actor but his dad asked Robert to join a theatre club. After a few years in the club, Robert got an important part in a play, Our Town. While he was performing, someone with an important job in the arts saw him. Soon, Robert was looking for professional acting jobs. When he was just 17, he got a part in one of the Harry Potter films.

Two years later, he went to Hollywood, US, and he got the main part in Twilight. The director saw over 3,000 actors, but he chose Robert. The film was very popular and at the age of 22, Robert became an international film star. He starred in four more Twilight films between 2008 and 2012. Together, the films made $3.3 billion.

Robert didn't want to be in typical Hollywood films so after that he chose other films like The King and Good Time. However, he loved the idea of being Batman and he got the part. What's next for Robert? Who knows, but we can't wait!
