Tennis Ace

By Alison West

Naomi Osaka is one of the world's top tennis players today. She was born in Osaka, Japan, in 1997. Her father is from Haiti and her mother is from Japan and she has an older sister called Mari.

In 1999, Naomi's father watched American tennis stars Venus and Serena Williams play tennis at the French Open. Because of this, and despite having little experience of tennis himself, he decided to train his daughters.

When Naomi was three, her family moved to New York. In 2006, they moved to Florida. At this point, Naomi was still training hard and showing a lot of talent. As a result, she didn't play in any junior competitions. Instead, she jumped this stage and competed with professional women players. Her first match was in October 2011 on her 14th birthday.

In 2013, shortly before she turned 16, Naomi played her first professional match. After that, she played brilliantly in all her matches and won various awards. In 2016, she received the Women's Tennis Association (WTA) best new player prize. Then, in 2018, Naomi won the US Open. It was a difficult competition, but she didn't give up, beating Serena Williams in the final round. It was an incredible achievement.

As well as prize money, Naomi has received money from companies who want her to advertise their products, such as fashion company Louis Vuitton. In 2014, sportswear company Adidas paid her to wear their sports clothes and then Nike™ replaced Adidas in 2019. The following year, the media said that Naomi was the highest-paid female athlete of all time.

Naomi has had some difficult moments in her career. For example, the media haven't always been kind to her. However, she is a brilliant tennis player and is a role model for young people.
