Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the following questions.

Community life in traditional craft villages in Vietnam is a bit different from that in modern urban neighborhoods. Most craft villages in Vietnam are extended communities, where many generations live together and support each other in maintaining traditional crafts. In a craft village, the oldest artisan has the strongest voice and takes responsibility for leading most production activities. Each village has its own craft secrets and values. Younger workers respect older craftsmen, and older craftsmen are patient and kind with the younger generation. In these craft villages, traditional values are still essential in the relationships between master artisans and apprentices, as well as among family members.

A traditional craft item is often crafted at home with the participation of the whole extended family. Although influenced by modern machinery, Vietnamese artisans are still very dedicated to handcrafting. They show skill, patience, and creativity. For Vietnamese artisans, preserving their traditional trade is the most valuable part of their life, so most master craftsmen want to teach as many young people as possible if they can. However, masters usually follow strict rules when training apprentices to teach them high discipline and quality.

As a Vietnamese saying goes, "Keep the trade to keep the roots," which means that traditional skills are the most important heritage. Craft bonds are very strong in Vietnam.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the following questions.

The world is changing quickly, and this affects how Vietnamese people travel. In the past decade, transportation habits in Vietnam have changed noticeably. Traditional vehicles are now mixed with modern options, and Vietnamese transport has become more diverse with electric vehicles and public transit from other modern cities. New trends in commuting have appeared, fitting today's faster pace and the need for convenience.

One big change is the habit of quick, eco-friendly travel. A study by urban transport analysts found that many Vietnamese people now prefer electric motorbikes and ride-hailing services. The main reasons for this shift are a busier lifestyle and less time spent in traffic jams. Electric motorbikes today are not only easy to operate but also have stylish designs that attract young people, making them more popular. With a young population, they now like cleaner lifestyles, so green vehicles are even more appealing.

Globalization has also brought new mobility options to Vietnam. Many Western and international transport models, like shared electric scooters, rapid transit buses, and ride-sharing platforms, have become popular and attract people of all ages. These travel options are convenient and can be used for different daily activities. But despite these changes, Vietnamese people still keep many traditional customs, such as commuting together with family members and showing courtesy to elderly pedestrians. For example, younger commuters invite older people to take seats first on public buses, showing respect. This is a cultural value strongly rooted in Vietnamese society.

Changing transportation habits doesn't mean forgetting tradition. Instead, it combines modern trends with cultural values, making Vietnamese traffic culture both courteous and up-to-date. Adapting to new habits while keeping traditions allows Vietnamese commuting culture to stay true to the past while embracing the future.
