Part V: Reading Comprehension 1

The Japanese diet is known worldwide for being very healthy. People in Japan live longer than in many other countries, and their food choices are a big reason why. A typical Japanese meal includes a lot of fish, rice, and fresh vegetables. Fish provides healthy fats which are good for the brain and the heart. They also eat a lot of tofu, which is rich in protein and low in fat.

Unlike Western diets, Japanese people eat very little fast food or red meat. They prefer steaming or boiling their food rather than frying it in a lot of oil. When it comes to drinks, green tea is the most popular choice. Green tea helps clean the body and provides energy without using sugar.

Another important rule in Japan is eating until you are 80% full. This habit stops people from overeating and gaining too much weight. Also, Japanese people are very active. They walk or cycle to work and train stations every day. Combining a nutritious diet with daily physical activity creates a balanced and healthy lifestyle that anyone can learn from.

25. Japanese people usually eat a lot of red meat. _____
26. Frying food in oil is the most popular cooking method in Japan. _____
27. Green tea provides energy without adding sugar. _____
28. Japanese people stop eating when they feel 80% full. _____
29. What is the main idea of the passage?
A. Why Japanese people use trains. B. The healthy diet and lifestyle of Japanese people.
C. How to cook fish and rice. D. The dangers of eating Western fast food.
30. Which is NOT mentioned as a part of the Japanese lifestyle?
A. Drinking sweet soft drinks. B. Eating a lot of tofu.
C. Walking or cycling to work. D. Steaming or boiling food.
