A New Life in the City

Last month, eleven-year-old Sophie moved from a small village to a big city with her family. At first, she wasn't happy. Her village was quiet, and she knew everyone. The city was crowded, noisy and full of cars.

On her first Saturday, Sophie's dad took her to explore their new neighbourhood. They walked past a modern shopping centre and visited a museum. Sophie loved the old photographs of the city. She was surprised to learn that hundreds of years ago, people travelled around the city on foot or by horse.

After lunch, they went to a beautiful park between the library and the sports centre. Sophie saw children riding bikes and playing football. She even made a new friend called Emma.

On Sunday, Emma showed Sophie her favourite places. They visited a bookshop opposite the cinema and bought ice cream near the river.

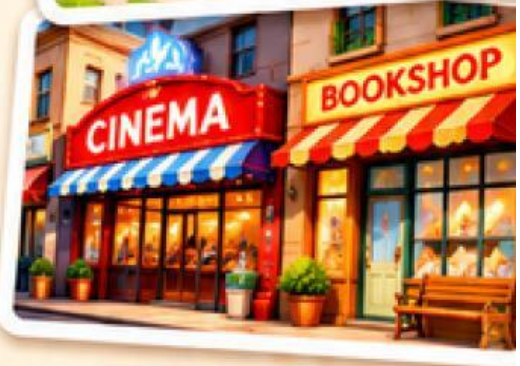

That evening, Sophie told her parents, "I still miss our village, but the city isn't so bad. There are lots of interesting places, and I can make new friends here!"

Sophie knew that city life had both advantages and disadvantages, but she was ready for her new adventure.
