Moving More, Living Better: Vietnam's Growing Health Challenge

As modern lifestyles become increasingly sedentary, physical inactivity is emerging as a serious public health concern in Viet Nam. Office workers spend hours sitting at their desks, while many young people devote much of their free time to digital devices rather than outdoor activities. Having recognized this problem, the Ministry of Health introduced a new national handbook on physical activity in July 2026, (1) _____ provides practical recommendations for people of different age groups.

LIVEWORKSHEETS

According to figures cited in the handbook, more than one in five Vietnamese adults do not meet recommended physical activity levels. The situation is particularly concerning among women, with 28.3% failing to get enough exercise, compared with 16.1% of men. These figures suggest that (2) _____ adults are still not sufficiently active, despite growing awareness of the importance of a healthy lifestyle.

Regular exercise offers benefits that extend far beyond weight control. It can improve cardiovascular health, strengthen muscles and bones, and reduce the risk of chronic diseases such as diabetes. (3) _____ some people believe that maintaining good health requires expensive gym memberships or intensive training programmes, everyday activities such as walking, cycling and climbing stairs can also make a meaningful difference.

The new handbook encourages individuals (4) _____ forms of exercise that suit their age, physical condition and daily routines. It also highlights the importance of reducing sedentary time, particularly among children and teenagers, who increasingly spend long periods sitting in front of screens. Developing healthy habits at an early age can contribute to better physical and mental well-being in adulthood.

Ultimately, improving public health requires more than individual effort. Schools, workplaces and local communities all have a role to play in creating environments that make physical activity accessible and enjoyable. Greater public awareness and community (5) _____ are essential to building a healthier and more active society.
