A Saturday at the School Club Fair

By ten o'clock on Saturday, the photography club had set up its display in the school hall. Maya had been taking pictures for more than an hour when someone asked her where the film club was. She pointed to the room next door, then noticed that the film club's projector had stopped working. 'If we borrowed a screen from the library, we could show the film on a laptop,' she suggested. The librarian lent them a screen, and the film started fifteen minutes late. At the end of the day, Maya wrote an online post about the fair. 'Twelve clubs took part,' she wrote. She added that the film club's ability to solve problems made it the most impressive club at the event.
