A Viking explorer

Erik the Red was a Viking. He was born in 950 in Norway. It was a violent time, and after Erik's father killed a man, the family left Norway and travelled to Iceland. In 982, Erik also killed a man. He sailed west and disappeared. After three years, he returned to Iceland and told people about a land with green fields. He convinced many to join him and travel to this beautiful land, which he named Greenland. The vikings established two colonies. Erik had four children: a daughter and three sons. His famous son, Leif, was the first European to discover America. In 1002, a group of immigrants brought disease to the colonies and many people died, including Erik, in the winter of 1003.
