

Who are Waiters

Read the text.

Waiters are men and women who take orders and serve food in restaurants.

They are usually assigned to serve a certain number of tables (called a station) by the restaurant manager, the host or hostess, or the headwaiter. Waiters give a copy of the restaurant's menu to each customer and sometimes explain how the different meals on the menu are prepared. They write down customers' orders so that the cooks can prepare each dish exactly as requested.

When the food is ready, waiters carry it from the kitchen to the tables. Good waiters remember what each person has ordered and can place the correct dish in front of the person who ordered it. This kind of service assures good tips and brings customers back to the restaurant. Waiters give constant attention to the guests.

They refill coffee cups and water glasses and ask if guests want to order anything else. They also record the food and drink prices on the guests' checks.

When guests are ready to leave, waiters take the checks to the tables. In some restaurants waiters take payment for meals; in others guests take their checks directly to the cashier.

Keep the Customer Satisfied

Step 1: Listen as your teacher reads the conversation.

Elena: Are you going to the movies tonight?

Lee: Yes, I am.

Elena: What movie are you going to see?

Lee: The Big Kiss.

Customer: Excuse me! I'm ready to order. I can't wait!

Lee: Oh, I'm sorry, sir. May I take your order?

LATER

Elena: Let's wait for our break to talk about movies, OK?

Lee: That's a good idea. I want to keep my job, and I want to be a manager someday. Besides, we're paid to serve customers.

Elena: Right! That's a good attitude. We're not paid to talk about the movies.

Step 1: Use the words from the box to complete the sentences. Use each word or phrase only once. If the word or phrase begins a sentence, use a capital letter.
