Physiognomy is looking at people's appearance and making guesses about their personality. It's not a new idea.

So how does it work? Everything about your face says something about you. For example, different face shapes match different personality types. Have you got a round face?

Eyes are also important. Wide apart eyes mean that you are tolerant. Eyes close together mean the opposite. If your nose is too big, you could be violent.

If the top is too thin, you might not be very loving to others. If the bottom one is too thin, you might give too much. Is there any truth in any of this? It depends who you ask. What is certainly true is that we all have opinions about people when we first see them.
