Greek monks

1. Where do they live?
2. How do they make their money (or how will they in the future)?
3. How do they spend their money (or how will they in the future)?

When you think of a monk, you might think of a quiet man living in a place far away from others. The “free monks” of Greece do live far from others, but they are anything but quiet. In fact, they sing. They have been recording songs and selling many albums in Greece.

People of all ages love them. Their songs are recorded in different styles (digital keyboard and rock, for example) and are not only religious. The monks also sing about problems like drugs and globalization.

The cash from music sales isn't pouring in, but the monks are earning some money. A few people don't like this; they think monks shouldn't sing for money. But the monks happily accept the money. They set it aside for summer camps for teenagers. The monks also donate some of the money to social programs that help many people.
