SECTION I. THE ASSESSMENT OF COMMUNICATIVE COMPETENCE (30 points)

Read the text and do the tasks below the text.

Building Happiness

1 Modern science and technology have given us a deeper knowledge of the world around us. Machines and gadgets invented in the past hundred years are making our lives easier. We are living longer. But do these things make us happier? Modern life may be convenient, but it is also complicated. Many of us have many problems related to financial issues. A lot of people are

5 trying to find work, and those with jobs are often stressed by the demands of their professional lives. We are always rushing everywhere. One big factor that seems to control the current life is money: worrying about money, making money, spending money, borrowing money.

10 One country has chosen to focus on national happiness, and this country is Bhutan, a small kingdom in the Himalayan Mountains. In the 1970s, Bhutan's king started a new project the goal of which is national happiness. His idea was that people's happiness was more important than their economic wealth. Cultural and spiritual values were put above the amount of money in bank accounts. Today the government is responsible for better services that improve the quality of life of the citizens. Another key aspect of this approach has been the importance of protecting the environment and the natural beauty of Bhutan.

15 Almost 100% of Bhutanese children go to primary school where, in addition to traditional subjects, they learn about environmental protection as well as 'green' methods of farming and living. Life in Bhutan is simple. People's homes are basic and about 70% do not have electricity. This approach indicates positive developments because the people of Bhutan are now living twice as long as they used to.

20 In 2007, Thailand also adopted this idea as part of their own 'Green and Happiness Policy', followed by South Korea's 'Happiness Policy' in 2012, and Dubai's in 2014. Many other regions and local governments around the world have developed new policies based on Bhutan's system. A number of international conferences on the environment as well as on economics have promoted National Happiness Policy as a valuable example to follow.
