Myths, legends and culture

All cultures have myths, stories, legends, and folklore. They show what groups of people think about the world and how it is perceived. Oral arts and traditions are a way to preserve and transmit customs and values as well as to shape behavior.

A really interesting discovery about myths in cultures is that there are universal myths across different cultures from all around the world. These similarities are related to images, structures, events, and characters that answered the most common questions humans have, such as the origin of the universe and the meaning of life.

There are various similar myths and legends across cultures, for example epic cosmic battles, and the Great Flood which is part of the Christian and Jewish tradition, as well as Sumerian, Greek, Hindu, Mayan, and Native American legends. The most similar belief in all cultures is the existence of a great supreme being that created everything.
