Often in my town, if one of my friends has a birthday, their parents find a special place to have it. It could be on the beach or in their garden. On one occasion, we all went horse-riding and then had a party afterwards. Or sometimes they hire somewhere like a swimming pool or a room in a sports centre so that we can do sport. That's nice – but I like the smaller parties too. There are usually great things to eat, like pizza or burgers, ice cream and cake – things that everyone likes. The main thing is that the person who's having their birthday has a really great time – and we all work hard to make that happen.

Most of my friends prefer to have everyone at their house for their birthdays and have a big party. That means we can just listen to music, eat our favourite foods, and sit, chat and have a laugh together. Their parents usually organise it all, and then leave an older brother or sister in charge, watching TV! And if it's during the summer, we can all be outside, which is better because then we can have barbecues in the garden! We all try to take a present that our friend really wants. It doesn't have to be something expensive. It just shows that we thought about them on their special day.

My friends usually like to go out and meet everyone in a favourite café and have a meal together for their birthdays. Parents and older brothers and sisters come too, and it's a lovely atmosphere. We all give each other something special as a present – sometimes people make things themselves, which I think is actually better than buying a present from a shop because your friend will probably keep the thing you made for a very long time. I always look forward to other people's parties – and my own, of course!
