Lars and his father thanked Samson and then headed home.
Along the way, Lars told his father all about his exciting adventure.

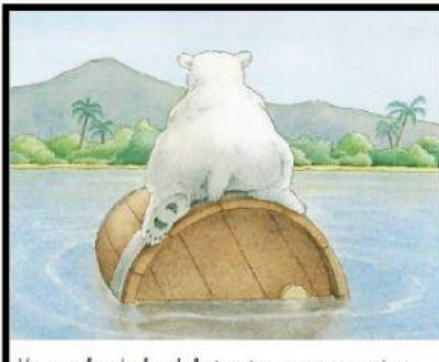

When Lars woke up, he was alone in the middle of the sea.
It was getting warmer and his piece of ice was melting.

Lars was going to the sea for the first time.
His father taught him how to swim and catch a fish.

Henry carried Lars on his back, down the river to the sea in order to see Samson, the whale.

He saw land ahead, but not any snow or ice.
Everything was green!

They made a big pile of snow to protect themselves from the wind. During the night, the ice began to crack apart.
