New and old fashions!

There are lots of ways (1) _____ buy clothes these days. You can buy them in a department store in your town or order something online from a country on the other side of the world. One trend that (2) _____ growing is buying 'second-hand' or used items – these are clothes that someone has worn before and is now selling.

One reason for buying second-hand clothes is that it's a good way of recycling clothes people don't want anymore. People could be bored with the item of clothing or it could be too (3) _____, for example. Maybe it was a birthday present that they didn't want or they had the same item already. Whatever the reason, it's much (4) _____ to give it to a second-hand shop or to sell it online than to throw it in the bin.

Another good reason is that second-hand clothes are often cheaper. If you're saving money, then you can find lots of clothes for sale that aren't as expensive as new clothes in shops. I've bought dresses and T-shirts for half the price in second-hand shops and on second-hand websites and they still look really good. Many second-hand shops in the UK give some or all of their money to charities and good causes, so you are saving money and helping people!

Finally, you can find really interesting clothes if you buy second-hand. Sometimes people are selling clothes from many years ago. I bought a hat from the 1960s online last week – my friends loved it (5) _____ it was so different. It's nice to find something unusual and not to look the same as all of your friends.
