Wuhan Celebrates End of Lockdown with Light Show, but Faces Tough Road

When the clock hit midnight, the Chinese city of Wuhan put on a light show. They were celebrating the end of an extraordinary 76 day 1)..... of the city, to contain the 2)..... pandemic.

"This is my first day out side. Being indoors for so long drove me crazy."

People were able to finally go outside, and stretch their legs and take in some fresh air for the first time in many months.

"Wuhan, keep it up!"

As 3)..... were lifted in Wuhan, people who are healthy and can prove that they are healthy were finally allowed to live the city for the very first time. Hundreds of them boarded the first trains out of the city; many of them went to the airport, to get on planes. But for many, life won't just 4)..... right back to normal again. There're many 5)..... still, about a second wave of 6)..... Even though China has reported today very few cases now, we know that many patients have the 7)..... but aren't showing 8)..... That means that they could potentially spread it to others, even if they're healthy. There's really no way to test every single person in Wuhan, in Hubei province and across China, and therefore there will always be a reservoir, 9)..... and concern about these people.

After such a 10)..... past few months, and many companies in China still rely on exports, and on trade as the rest of the world. And other countries go through the worst of their 11)....., there's real concern about whether or not, there will be a second wave of economic impact as well.

The bottom lines here, is that even as China unlocks Wuhan, and celebrates that, it's not clear that China as a whole is in the clear.

The rest of the world is dealing with the worst of the Coronavirus 12)..... right now, and many of them will look to China as a ray of hope because China is now emerging from the pandemic. But I think, what we'll continue to see is that the road to recovery will be very rocky, and it will be very uneven.
