A. Is it important to learn a few things about a country before visiting it? Read the text below and answer the questions that follow.

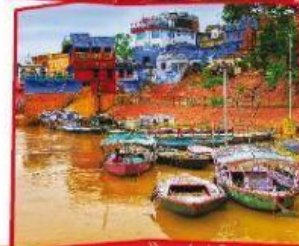

A journey to South India is a fascinating opportunity, but be sure to do some homework before packing.

The Dos and Don'ts for travelers to South India.

- India has an amazing culture which is very different from what you are probably used to. So, although Indians are usually very friendly and helpful, you must show respect for their culture.
- When you visit a temple or friends in India, you need to remove your shoes. This means you have to check that your socks are clean and don't have any holes!
- You must never refuse food when you are at an Indian person's home. Indians usually eat with their hands or use chappati bread, so watch what other people are doing and do the same.

- You don't need to dress in Indian clothing, but you have to pack some comfortable clothes that cover most of your body. Long pants and shirts are a good idea for men, while long skirts and T-shirts are an option for women. Also, since in South India one minute it's sunny and the next it's raining, especially during the summer months, you need to pack some waterproof clothes and an umbrella, too!
- You mustn't stand too close to Indian people because it is rude. Also, remember that Indians never hug or kiss their friends in public!
- Finally, India is full of colors, and amazing images you will want to remember. However, you must always ask for permission before you photograph something or someone; in some places you are not allowed to take photos.
