The first day at work

Congratulations! Having survived that demanding <sup>1</sup> fifty-minute interview, you've finally got the job you always wanted, and it's a <sup>2</sup> _____ job, too, so you'll be working nine to five. Tomorrow is your first day. So, how do you make a good impression? It doesn't matter whether you have a job in a <sup>3</sup> _____ shop, selling old clothes and books, or a <sup>4</sup> _____ hotel, dealing with very rich guests prepared to pay £10 for an <sup>5</sup> _____ coffee in the luxurious bar, because whatever your job, you need to dress smartly, smile broadly and look confident when you arrive. You want your colleagues to think you are a friendly and <sup>6</sup> _____ person, and you want your boss to think you're <sup>7</sup> _____, so look busy and keen to do as much as you can. You need to get to know people, remember names, and ask questions, too; and if your new employer has given you a huge <sup>8</sup> _____ manual to read, make sure you read it! Remember that your colleagues will be judging you from day one, so make sure they judge you well.
