(script in Student's Book on p.201)

At the end of the two days, I have a test. I go to a pub with Sheikh, and I have to talk to . I start talking to people and it goes OK. I don't think English really like it when a stranger starts speaking to them, but we laugh and I have some interesting conversations. Occasionally, Sheikh gives me . He reminds me to make contact with everyone I'm talking to, and tells me not to my arms – that kind of thing.

As we leave the pub, we hands. He says that the course has been good for me, and he gives me a up. So have I changed? Am I more charismatic? Not – I'm never going to stand like a again, for example. But perhaps charisma is simpler than that, anyway; it's about understanding who you are , and showing the best version of yourself.
