

How Cancel Culture works

- (Sup?) bro. What are you up to?
- Um, nothing much. Just _____ old videos and old tweets on celebrities trying to get them canceled.
- Canceled?
- Yeah um. It's when you jeopardize the livelihood and reputation of someone based on something they did in the past.
- Oh...why?
- I'm a part of the most toxic _____ on the internet. It's what we do.
- Okay
- Yep. We have to hold people accountable for what they've _____ in the past, _____ of who they are today. We don't judge people _____ on who they are now. We judge them on who they were.
- Hmm I see
- Honestly, to cancel someone, it doesn't even have to be something they did in the past. It could be _____ they did today, or something we think that they might do tomorrow. [###] nowadays, we cancel people for no reason. You can do absolutely nothing, we'll cancel you. The most _____ way to cancel someone is to create our own narrative and _____ a subgroup against that celebrity.
- What do you mean?
- Okay like Jay Cole, for instance. He said in a recent song "it's something about this Queen's tone that's _____ me". We took that line, _____ it and we created the narrative that says Jay Cole is telling black women to watch their tone, telling them to shut the [###] up and sit down. Now Jay Cole is a misogynist that _____ black women.
- Is that what he meant? Was that the intent?
- Probably not. But that's the thing with cancel culture. We create our own narratives. We don't follow logic or _____. We follow the herd.
- Oh...so so what do y'all get out of all this?
- I dunno. But sometimes, we bully people until _____, just to say that their apology isn't sincere. It's [###] great.
