

This is Nelly Wilson, a 27-year-old nurse. She is tall and thin and she works in a private hospital in the city. She looks after sick people. As for now she is assigned at the pediatric ward where all of her patients are babies and children.

She has a very tight schedule which she follows without fail. She gets up at six o'clock in the morning. She takes her shower and puts on her clothes. Then, she would have her breakfast of two slices of toast and a cup of hot coffee at half past six. At seven, she would get into her car and drives to work. She lives near the work place so after half an hour, she reaches the hospital.

She starts work at eight o'clock. Her work includes changing the soiled bedsheets in the ward, giving medicines to her patients, monitoring temperatures and most importantly, helping the doctors when they come to the wards for their regular visit. At one o'clock, she has lunch with other nurses. After lunch, she continues her work for a few more hours and at seven in the evening she goes home.

At home, she takes a shower and prepares dinner. She believes in eating healthy food so dinner is mostly salad and grilled fish or chicken. Sometimes she fixes herself a sandwich and iced tea. Then, she relaxes by watching television. At half past ten, she checks her uniform and irons it, then gets ready for bed. By eleven, it is lights out for Nelly.

*lights out – when lights should be switched off/time to sleep
