Question 1-8

You are going to read an extract from an article. For question 1-8 choose the correct answer ( A, B, C or D) and write it in the box provided beside the question.

Even before the pandemic razed our normal lives, I had noticed that children had the tendency to be stuck inside the house glued to their mobile phones. After much thought about it, I realize that it is the time and it is the new generation. Our children are missing real playtime. The playtime that I enjoyed most.

One evening, I went for a walk, I sat a while on the bench at a playground. There were several teenagers playing basketball nearby whilst the playground was unoccupied. I watched them play with nostalgia. When I was about ten or eleven, I used to spend a lot of time playing in the playground. I played with the neighbourhood children. Sometimes we go to different houses in groups. Let's say, today we are in Normala's house playing hide and seek, the next day, we might be at Raihan's house playing monopoly for hours. Then, the next day, we might be playing badminton on someone's lawn. I wish I can run around with my grandkids in this playground.

Alas, I couldn't even sit there long enough to bring back more memories- and there, a mosquito was hovering over me. Another has already sucked my blood. How could I have brought my grandkids here, dengue is on the rise! Parents need to be concerned about so many things nowadays before allowing their children out to play. They are merely trying to guard their children against any harm.

Parents seem to be concerned about the safety of their kids. They worry about kidnappers, strangers, or bullies that might hurt their children. These concerns are the main reasons why they do not allow their children to play and roam outside the house. These concerns have become barriers to free active play. When I look across the generations from mine to today's generation, it is very clear that these concerns have increased over time.

I see now why children do not seem to be happy. In one research that I have come across, it showed that children are in high spirits or ecstatic when they are playing with friends than in any other situation. I agree. I feel this way- joyful when remembering my own childhood play experiences. Through play, children can negotiate their physical and social environments. This in turn results in mastery over their world or environment. This aspect offers a lot of psychological benefits. When children get the opportunity to control their own actions, make and follow through on their own decisions, to solve their own problems whilst learning to follow rules in the play, grow up feeling that they are in control of their own lives and fate. When a person feels a lack of control over his or her own life, anxiety and depression can occur.

The natural means of making friends and learning to treat one another fairly is social play. As play is something voluntary and the friends they are playing with may abandon the game at any time if they feel uncomfortable, children learn to be aware of their friends' needs and attempt to meet them to maintain the play. Learning to get along and cooperate with others as equals could be the most crucial evolutionary function of social play. Social play is one way of teaching children that they are not special even though they are more skilled or better at certain games. In any game, one must consider the needs and wishes of the others as equal to their own. Otherwise, others would exclude them and they would be left with no friends.

I am rather worried because increasing social isolation is a potential indication of psychopathology and the decline in play may perhaps be both the consequence and the cause of the increased social isolation and loneliness.

Section B: Gapped Text ( 6 marks )

Question 9-14

You are going to read an article about how technology changed our lives. Six sentences have been removed from the text. Choose from the sentences A to H and fit one into each gap from 9 to 14. There are two extra sentences which you do not have to use.

Technology

Technology is basically the way we execute the discoveries of science and blend it with our own needs. This general term refers to the different tools, machines and equipment we use in our daily life. These tools and equipment have been invented by man to create convenience by making the tasks faster, easier and more comfortable.

Since the use of microchips in computers and mobiles, technology has come a long way.

9  Besides the countless examples where technology has changed our lives, there are some which are considered as revolutions for mankind.

The technology used in the field of robotics is one such fine example. Nowadays robots are being used by people and industries all over the world for various purposes. 10  One such area is the cleaning and managing of radioactive waste.

Artificial Intelligence (AI) is another field which is a classic example of the technological advancements man has achieved. It is difficult to imagine that a machine would be capable of thinking like us. 11  It can do activities such as problem-solving, planning, learning and even reasoning. Today AI is used in all major areas such as warfare, security, healthcare and communication. On top of this, it is far more efficient than us and has a lower rate of error.

Technology has its own importance in our lives. 12  The modernisation in the world today has all been possible because of the technological developments in different fields. Moreover, it has helped in reducing the risks people had to undertake in many sectors such as mining. Tasks are less risky and are more efficient with the presence of new tools.

It is undeniable that technological advancements are important for us. Yet, it is also true that we seem to be over-dependent on them nowadays and face drawbacks of this technology too. 13  Crimes are reported through misuse of digital technology. Humans are mentally as well as physically dormant as they are highly dependent on technology.

Technology is surely a boon for mankind. 14  But, still, it is for us to decide how best we make use of the technology available to us. Robots and other technological advancements have served as a good servant to us but the moment it becomes the master it can wipe off humanity from the Earth.

- A Robots are used in places which are otherwise considered harmful for humans thereby protecting us.
- B The use of mobiles which are meant to keep in touch in difficult times is killing valuable time and some end up misusing them.
- C Even in primitive occupations such as agriculture, there have been so many technological advancements with modern tools.
- D AI is an intelligent machine capable of behaving like us.
- E It is all the more important for the economic growth of a country.
- F The advancement in aeronautics field and agriculture are the other examples that have helped us to make progress.
- G Our lives would not have been simpler and faster without technological advancements.
- H That is what AI has been successful in doing.
