Conclusion

Introduction

Advantages of smartphones

Disadvantages of smartphones

a. _____

Smart phones are great tools for many areas, but many people also believe that these devices are not always as good as people think they are. This essay will compare the advantages and disadvantages of smart phones.

b. _____

First and foremost, smart phones can help students with their study. A lot of things can be found with smart phones because they can be used to connect to the internet. In addition, smart phones are also good for people who work. For example, sometimes they can download documents and read them before going to a meeting, and this will help to save so much time.

c. _____

However, smart phones can affect users' health. Radiation from mobile phones can cause cancer, and staring at phone screens for too long can cause eye-related problems such as irritation and even myopia. Moreover, having a smart phone can cause addiction. A lot of people these days cannot go 2 minutes without looking at their phones. Therefore, today's society has become less close as people are spending more time connecting with people online rather than in person.

d. _____

In conclusion, smart phones can help people both at schools and at their workplaces, but they can also ruin real-world relationships. Therefore, people should make sure that they do not let smart phones control their lives.
