TEXT 1: STORY

A PROMISE IS A PROMISE

by Wendy Hartman

Storks are birds with long orange legs and long beaks, that fly from the North to the South and back again. A long time ago, storks were the noisiest birds in the world. 1

They used to talk all the time. All of them used to talk at the same time about different things, but about nothing interesting. Their chattering made the ostrich very angry. He felt that the stork's chattering prevented him from flying. 2

He practised for days, but he never lifted off the ground. "That's it," he said. "Those storks talk too much. They need to be punished." 3

"We can't stand it either," complained the other animals. "You want silence?" asked the lizard. "Just whisper the magic words at midnight and you will have silence. At midnight on the third day the spell will end. After that you must come up with your own plan." The animals followed the lizard's advice. 4

The next day they were amazed because there was no sound coming from the storks as their beaks were shut tightly. At last the animals could talk to each other without having to shout. 5

The ostrich was delighted about the silence! He ran about, flapping his wings and practising flying in peace and quiet, but he never left the ground. He went to the storks who sat, huddled together with their feathers fluffed and their beaks shut. 6

"Oh dear," said the ostrich, "they look so miserable and hungry. They may be irritating, but they must eat. I wish they could eat without all the talking." 7

Just before midnight the animals gathered around the storks. "Do you want to end the spell that keeps your beaks from opening?" they asked. The storks nodded eagerly. "Well, we can arrange that," said the ostrich. "You will each promise never ever to speak again. A promise is not be broken." The storks nodded. 8

From that day on storks have been silent. You will still see them clacking their beaks together, pretending to make a noise, but a promise is a promise and they have not broken their promise yet. 9

You will also still see the ostrich running at full speed, flapping his wings trying to fly. Until today he has never been able to fly.

Words are cruel

by Ellie P.

- 1 Everyone is different
 No one is the same
 We are entitled to our opinions
 We are allowed to think outside of the box
- 2 Stop, stop judging others
 For doing what they want to do
 Wearing what they want to wear
 Thinking how they want to think
 Daring how they want to dare
- 3 Instead of judging others
 Judge yourself
 For not treating others right
 For not letting someone live their –
 Life
 The way they want to
- 4 It doesn't matter
 What you think
 Your opinion is like a balloon without air
 Your words are meaningless
 Yet you sit there
 Judging justifying and jabbing at others
 Just because you are jealous
 That they have something
 That You have always wanted
- 5 Confidence
