Cats Make Wonderful Pets!

There are certain points to consider before you decide to get a cat. First of all, be prepared to spend time with your cat. Although cats don't have a closer relationship with humans than most other pets, they still require attention and care. Cats have their own different characters and their own special habits and choices. It is a good idea to prepare yourself with some basic knowledge about cats before you get one.

As distant as they may be. Cats really love to play. But cats usually don't fetch like dogs; don't just throw a ball at your cat and expect it to be entertained. Cats like to be spoiled by humans. They like to have "communication" with you. Spend time playing and having contact with your cat.
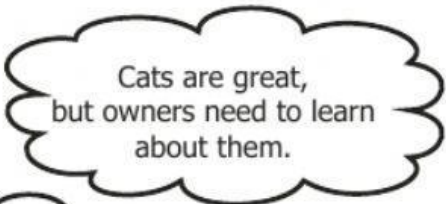

Cats show their love to you not only through making their typical sounds, but also by touching your arms, legs, or another part of your body. If you are new to cats and you don't know this, you may think they want to hurt you. However, it is just friendly play.

They probably love to see what is going on around them more than other pets. They do this by jumping to high places like a sofa, cupboard, or table to keep an eye on you and what you're doing.

Cats love to have sharp nails, so buying a cushion for your cat will keep your furniture safe. In order to avoid any damage, keep your cat's nails short and train it to use the cushion. This will save you money and lots of headaches in the future.
