Pronunciation practice of the letter 'V' sound for advanced students of conversational English

A letter written to a disruptive student from a very formal and stuffy Dean of the University requesting he reconsider his driving habits.

Dear Vincent,
Adventurous driving , like swerving, weaving and going over the speed limit is not advisable for various reasons. Having unknown visibility and variable terrain can wreak havoc on your driving skills, putting every adventurist parvenu at a distinct disadvantage.

If you continue to cavort around the campus, recklessly driving as you do, you may inadvertently advocate for others to rive and evulse advice given by your advisors and circumvent your civic responsibilities.

In observation, a Corvette is not a very conservative vehicle and often invokes feelings of frivolity and effervescence that may pervert your perceptions of your maneuvering abilities.

This is conventional, valuable and life saving advice which I hope convinces you to reconvene with your convictions and reconsider your driving habits before you are convicted of vehicular manslaughter which has irrevocable and long living repercussions that will reverberate in everyday life, speaking volumes about your character reversing the value of your virtue and imperil the viability of your voyage at our distinguished University.

Benevolently,
Dean Victor Walker
Victorian University
