It is good to have friends. All of us like to do things with our friends. Friends share secrets and help each other. Sometimes they join together to fight an enemy. They become allies.

The Bahamas has many allies. One of these is the United States of America, the USA. We do things together, we share secrets, we help each other, and sometimes we fight together.

As friends, each country has a special place, called an embassy, in the other country. The United States Embassy in Nassau issues visas to Bahamians so that they can travel freely to the USA, and to other American territories. The Embassy provides help in other ways too. For example, helping young Bahamians to study at American colleges and universities, and providing special help to our Government for drugs detection. We learn more about such help later in this book in lessons 9 and 10.

The embassy also helps Americans who live in the Bahamas, or who visit our islands as tourists.

The Bahamian embassy in the United States is in Washington DC. It is a small piece of Bahamian territory inside the USA. The Bahamian ambassador to the USA keeps our government informed of political events in that country. The ambassador helps to keep a good relationship between our two nations.

Most of the money that we spend in the Bahamas comes from tourism, and most of the tourists who come here are from the USA. The money that the tourists spend helps develop our country. The Bahamian government uses the money from tourism to build roads, schools and hospitals, and to pay people who work in

There are a number of organizations through which Bahamians and Americans can share social, historical, and cultural relationships. The Bahamas will always share strong ties with the USA.

Tourism

Perhaps the most important link that The Bahamas has with the United States is the tourist link. The link is not a new one since tourism really began in the 1740s. At that time, Nassau, the capital, was known as a place where poor health can be restored. Hence, the first tourists were invalids.

Tourism arrivals increased with the completion of the first hotel, the Royal Victoria in 1861, the Colonial Hotel (now British Colonial Hilton) in 1898. By 1900, the Miami –Nassau Winter Steamship service started. Visitors of a different kind began to visit Nassau, mainly during the winter. These were mostly the rich and famous.

Tourism grew at a slow pace, but it first began to be looked at as a business in the 1950s when the late Sir Stafford Sands was put in charge of the Development Board. His aim was to increase the number of visitors that came and also make tourism a year-round business.

To achieve this, he encouraged hotels to install air-conditioning. Gambling was made legal, and casinos were built in Nassau and Freeport. These were added attractions for the tourists. Another important step to increase visitor arrivals was the massive advertising campaign that was carried out in the USA, Canada, and Europe to encourage visitors to come.

Tourism took an added importance after 1964, the year which saw the introduction of internal self-government. The Development Board was replaced by the Ministry of Tourism.

In 1967, the new Progressive Liberal Party Government recognized the importance of tourism to the economy of the Bahamas. From 1969 to 1979, under Minister Clement Maynard, spectacular progress in tourism, based on market research, was implemented. Tremendous efforts were made to improve tourism through staff training, courtesy campaigns and in helping hotels and hoteliers in planning new programmes.

The majority of tourists that visit The Bahamas are from the United States. The largest market being in the north-east region from cities like New York, Boston, and Philadelphia. The next largest market is found in the southern states of Atlanta, North Carolina and Florida. The least number of visitors come from the mid- western states such as Ohio, Nebraska and Missouri. This tourism link is the bread and butter of The Bahamian economy.
