The history of the Oktoberfest

The young German Prince Ludwig was getting married to a princess named Theresa in 1908. To celebrate the wedding, a great festival (Fest) was held on a field outside the old city gates of Munich. The festival was so popular that it soon became an annual tradition in Munich, and is now one of the most visited festivals in the world.

Although it is called "Oktoberfest", it is now actually mostly celebrated in September as the weather is a bit better. There originally used to be horse races and food and drink tents, now there are just fairground rides and food and drink tents. In the food and drink tents, they sell beer, sausages and cakes. It is still common for people to wear old-fashioned clothes such as "Lederhosen" (brown leather dungarees) or "ein Dirndl" (a traditional Alpine dress), which are part of a tradition in the region (former kingdom) of Bavaria.
