Asia is a fantastic place to visit, with a totally different culture to our own with spectacular landscapes, metropolis and amazing food. However, when visiting any place it's good idea to be aware on the different traditions and customs around the continent.

- Don't clean your plate. When your mom probably told you eat anything in your plate, it's not the case in here, and in many others countries too. Leaving nothing on your plate means that you are still hungry, and it's seen as rude.
- Don't misplace your chopsticks. When you finish your bowl of noodles, don't leave your chopsticks upright on the bowl, it's a disrespectful symbol of death. Just leave them horizontally above the bowl.
- Don't tip. It's well known that tipping it's ok, but in Japan for example you shouldn't tip at all. It's considering insulting.
- Don't wear revealing clothes. The majority of Asian people are more conservative than the west. The best idea to dress is in moderate way. When you visit religious temple and other religious sites.
- Don't take photos without permission. Many public places in Asia banned photography, there are signals that remember you. If you want to photograph any person you should ask for permission to strangers.
- Don't use your left hand. Try to use your left hand as few times as possible. In countries with big amount of Muslims population such as Indian, and Bangladesh don't point out things or shake hands.
- Don't show up your feet. In many Asian countries feet are considered symbolic unclean. Make sure not to show your feet when sitting on the floor.
- Don't wear shoes inside. Particularly in Japan but also in some countries is rude to use shoes in somebody's house or in public buildings.
- It's not common to greet with a hug or a kiss as well specially if you don't know them well.
- Don't be provocative. Politics and religion can be touchy subjects here, just like the rest of the world. Even if you want to express your own opinion it may upset someone.
