

THE HISTORY OF HALLOWEEN

We celebrate Halloween on 31st October. Today it's a popular festival in the USA and in lots of other countries around the world, but did you know that a group of people called the Celts started the tradition of Halloween in Ireland about 2,000 years ago?

Halloween was originally a festival for the dead, called Samhain. The word means 'summer's end' and it was a time of the year when people started to prepare for the winter. Some people believed that ghosts came out on this day and they lit bonfires to protect themselves against these ghosts.

Soon, children started to dress up as ghosts. People gave the children treats to stop them from playing tricks, such as knocking on the door and running away. In the past these treats were things like autumn fruit, nuts and occasionally coins. These days, not many children play tricks, but they dress up and adults give them sweets.

Making jack-o'-lanterns is a tradition that started in Ireland. People put candles inside jack-o'-lanterns and placed them outside their houses for protection. Traditionally, people used potatoes and other vegetables to make these lanterns but when thousands of Irish people moved to the USA, they started using pumpkins instead. It's much easier to cut a scary design into a pumpkin than into a potato!
