The Water Cycle

A diagram of the water cycle. At the top right is a sun. An arrow points from the sun to a cloud in the center. Below the sun is a body of water with three wavy lines representing evaporation. An arrow points from the water up to the central cloud. To the left of the central cloud is another cloud with rain falling from it. An arrow points from the central cloud to this rain cloud. Below the rain cloud is a mountain range with a river flowing from it. An arrow points from the river back to the body of water on the right. There are four sets of blank lines for labeling: one below the sun, one below the central cloud, one below the rain cloud, and one below the river/mountain area.
