Bees for the Farm

Characters: Farmer Dan; Joan, his granddaughter

Farmer Dan: I don't have any bees.

Joan: That is good. Bees are bad. They sting people.

Farmer Dan: Bees are not bad. We need them to grow food. If they aren't here to carry pollen from flower to flower, my trees will not grow fruit.

Joan: Oh, that is too bad. What will you do?

Farmer Dan: I know a beekeeper who sells honey. He puts bees on people's farms. The bees make honey from the flowers. They also carry pollen from flower to flower. I asked my friend to put some hives near my fruit trees.

Joan: That is good. Now you will have bees.

Farmer Dan: Here he comes now. Welcome, bees!

1. What is one fact that is stated in the play?
