Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions.

Volunteering is generally considered an altruistic activity where an individual or group provides services for no financial gain "to benefit another person, group or organization". Volunteering is also renowned for skill development and is often intended to promote goodness or to improve human quality of life. Europe is the world's wealthiest continent and the need for international volunteers is quite different from the world's poorer regions such as Africa or Latin America. But despite well-developed welfare, education, and health programs, there are communities all across Europe that are in need of volunteers, be it for teaching English, child care, summer camps, or preservation work. In addition, a volunteer vacation in Europe is not only a great way to help people and communities in need, but it is also a great opportunity to get to know Europeans and their cultures, learn a new language, and experience Europe in a different way.

Eastern Europe has become a prime destination for international volunteers, since it is Europe's poorest and least developed region. Volunteer work in Eastern Europe focuses primarily on social development projects, child care, and education. Volunteer work in Western Europe can be found everywhere, from the U.K. to Greece, and from Portugal to Germany. Opportunities range from restoration projects and environmental preservation to teaching, farming, and social services. There are both long and short-term volunteer opportunities all over Europe, ranging from two weeks up to a year.

Read the following passage and choose the correct answer.

Sarah: I spent the month of November 2015 volunteering in South Africa. For the first two weeks, I worked with 2 to 4 kids in grades 1 and 2 on Maths and literacy skills. For the last two weeks, I instructed the small kids to do personal hygiene and make toys. The kids here are motivated to get a good education, and the presence of an English speaking volunteer stands them in very good stead for later life. The schooling system in South Africa means that children from the townships often lack quality teaching, especially in English. Volunteer teachers are hugely appreciated to help overcome these challenges. Volunteers mainly help to teach English and Maths, although there is also the opportunity to help with other subjects such as Geography and Drama.

Ray: Working with people living with HIV/AIDS is always emotionally and technically demanding. Before my volunteer trip to Ghana, I got training about HIV/AIDS. I worked with different groups of people. It was very emotional when I visited and played with children with HIV/AIDS in orphanages. I also visited schools, universities and households to give presentations and leaflets about HIV/AIDS. I had never felt so helpful before. I can't wait for my next trips to other African countries.

Katie: My main duty was to provide financial advice for poor households in Kenya. I had to adapt myself immediately to the new weather, new people and new food there. Fortunately, my host family was the most selfless and encouraging people I'd ever known. I lived with three other volunteers, and the host family considered us as their daughters. I loved dinner time when all the family members gathered together and told jokes.
