Skateboarding and Me

Welcome to my blog! I am Albert Smith and I am thirteen. I am a skateboarder. I live in New York with my family. I skate every day because in my country, I can skate anywhere. That is the best thing about skateboarding. But, skateboarding can be dangerous too. I have had a few accidents especially when I am learning new stunts. But I won't stop skating. I enjoy it too much. One day, I hope to be a professional skateboarder.

Skateboarding has a long history. The first skateboards were invented in the United States of America in the 1950s. At that time, people made their own skateboards. By 1959, people could buy skateboards in stores. The new skateboards were an easy and fun way to travel around the streets. Then, in the 1960s, skateboarding became popular with surfers in California. They built ramps to skate on when the waves were too small for surfing. They also skated in empty swimming pools. The curved walls of the swimming pools were perfect for doing stunts.

Since the 1960s, skateboards have changed a lot. My skateboard is better and safer than the skateboards of the past. There are also different kinds of skateboards. Some skateboards are longer, for racing down hills. Others are shorter, for riding in the streets and doing stunts. There are now skateboard parks and competitions all over the world. But some things have not changed. For young people like me, skateboarding is a sport you can do almost anywhere!
