TEXT A:

People volunteer for a number of different reasons. One of the more obvious reasons why people volunteer is because they find something they are passionate about and want to do something good for others. People who volunteer in their community have a personal attachment to the area and want to make it a better place for themselves and for others.

Many people who volunteer think that they are very fortunate to live the way they do and want to give something back to society, as a way of balancing the scales. Many people choose to volunteer because of the personal benefits that volunteering has on their character. Indeed, a volunteer often says that the experience has made him or her a better person. In most cases, volunteers also become more concerned and aware of the problems facing the world and many feel that they were ignorant or narrow-minded before.

Volunteer work is a great way to gain experience in a broad range of fields. You can gain experience in education, social work, health care, marketing, and web design… The opportunities are endless. Volunteering is a great way to put in a little of your time and gain some valuable skills, whether professional or practical.

Volunteer work can often lead to a paying job. Volunteers can try out a field to see if it suits them and also show that they are dedicated enough to work for free in the hope that it may lead to a paid job. English teaching is a great example of a volunteer job that often turns into a career.

TEXT B:

People volunteer for a number of similar reasons. One of the more obvious reasons why people volunteer is because they find something they are worried about and want to do something good for others. People who volunteer in their community have a personal attachment to the world and want to make it a better place for themselves and for others.

Many people who volunteer think that they are very unlucky to live the way they do and want to give something back to society, as a way of balancing the scales. Many people choose to volunteer because of the personal advantages that volunteering has on their character. Indeed, a volunteer often says that the experience has made him or her a better person. In most cases, volunteers also become more concerned and aware of the problems facing the world and many feel that they were ignorant or narrow-minded before.

Volunteer work is an excellent way to gain experience in a broad range of fields. You can gain experience in education, social work, health care, marketing, and web design… The opportunities are endless. Volunteering is a great way to put in a lot of your time and gain some valuable skills, whether professional or practical.

Volunteer work can rarely lead to a paying job. Volunteers can try out a field to see if it suits them and also show that they are devoted enough to work for free in the hope that it may lead to a paid job. English teaching is a great example of a volunteer job that often turns into a career.
