NOTHING BUT NETS

Katherine was five when she watched a television programme about malaria with her mum. Malaria is a terrible disease that people get from small insects, like mosquitoes. It isn't dangerous in rich countries, but in other places where people are poor, it kills many children. In Africa, about 3,000 children die from malaria every day. 'Mum, that isn't right! We need to do something right away!' said Katherine. And they did.

Katherine's first idea was to make lemonade and sell it to collect money for the children in Africa. But her mum said, 'We probably need to do something more.' She wanted to find a way to stop the mosquito! Katherine's mum looked online and made a great discovery: a charity selling nets to protect children's beds in Africa. 'These nets stop the mosquitoes and they only cost $10 each!' Katherine and her mum were very excited!

Together, they talked to people in their town and around the USA and explained things about malaria and the children in Africa. They showed them the bed net and how it worked, and asked them to give $10 to save a child. Their talks were a great success! In three years, they collected more than $100,000 to buy bed nets. They saved thousands of lives. Katherine's family were very proud of her. 'One little child can bring an amazing change,' said her mum.
