The Woodcutter and his Axe

One day, a woodcutter was cutting a tree on the bank of the river when his axe slipped from his hands and fell into the water. The poor man was so sad that he started to cry bitterly.

At this moment, an angel appeared there and asked the woodcutter why he cried. He told the story, and the angel felt sorry and dived into the river to find the lost axe. Later, he appeared from the water with a gold axe in his hand, but the woodcutter refused to take it, saying that it was not his axe. The angel dived into the water once again and appeared with an axe that was made of silver. The woodcutter was still sad. He shook his head harder and told the angel that his own axe was made of iron. The third time the angel came out of the water with an iron axe in his hand. Filled with joy, the woodcutter cried, "This belong to me".

He thanked the angel for helping him. The angel was greatly impressed by his honesty, and he gave the woodcutter the other two axes as a reward for his honesty.
