In the past, some old ways of communication such as postal mails or telephones were expensive and time-consuming. But nowadays, thanks to the Internet, communication including personal or business communication becomes easier. We can send an email in the form of video, image or multimedia to anyone in the world instantaneously. In addition, social networks such as Facebook, Twitter and Instagram that help us get in touch with friends, colleagues and family has become more popular.

For students, Internet is the most useful source of information which helps to widen knowledge. In fact, students use Internet as an efficient reference tool for their study such as completing their assignments, preparing for a presentation about a specific topic. Furthermore, it is a factor that promotes exchange of academic information and social knowledge. Moreover, it helps to reduce stress, make new friends to create a lot of relationships.

A large number of companies in my country are working in IT sector and e-commerce, which heavily depend on the Internet. There is not any office or company running without Internet. It helps businesses do business easily, exchange information quickly and negotiate with customers or partners more conveniently. Internet also contributes to improving quality in other sectors such as education and health.
