When people think of movies, they usually think of Hollywood. However, many of the earliest tools relating to motion pictures were not American inventions. It was thanks to the efforts of inventors from several countries that we can enjoy movies today.

In the early 1800s, an Englishman named William George Horner invented the zoetrope. In it a series of pictures were mounted inside a drum. When the rotating pictures were viewed through slots, they merged into one and appeared to move. In California in 1877, another Englishman, named Eadweard Muybridge, used a series of cameras to record the movements of a galloping horse. Later, he also recorded human movements. He used his still pictures to illustrate books; thus it was left to the German, Ottomar Anschutz, to invent a way to rapidly show the picture series to give the impression of movement. Finally, it took a Frenchman, Etienne-Jules Marey, to develop a single camera to record movement. Marey shot his pictures on fixed plates, at the rate of 12 per second. As early as 1888 he was experimenting with celluloid film, an American invention.

While Thomas Edison was busy inventing something called the kinetograph camera, Louis Le Prince of France was patenting a 16-lens camera to take moving pictures and a projector to show them. By the following year he was working with a single-lens camera. Unfortunately, in 1890 le Prince suddenly disappeared from the train in which he was travelling and vanished forever. Taking up where Le Prince left off were Louis and Auguste Lumiere, who gave the world's first projected film performance, before a paying audience in Paris on December 28, 1895.

Motion pictures have come a long way since those early days and have had a great influence on society. It was thanks to the contributions of filmmakers and inventors from all over the world that movies have developed into the form we know today.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions.

Along with the rapid growth of the national economy and increased living standards, the use of disposables and over-packaged products has become common, which causes a waste of resources, and brings about a negative impact on the environment. Many countries have started to act to control the use of disposables and over-packaged, products.

In 1994, the Ministry of Environment in Korea has put restrictions on packaging methods. Korea's legal regulations require businesses to restrict their use of disposable products by reducing unnecessary packaging materials or not giving them out to customers for free. The use of materials are difficult to recycle is also prohibited.

Thanks to development of technology, biodegradable materials were invented to produce packaging products. They are able to decay naturally by bacteria. Therefore, biodegradable packaging helps to limit the amount of harmful chemicals released into the environment. In 2008, biodegradable bags were put in use in most of the supermarkets in Korea. Paper cups and paper bags are also given to shoppers for free, but in a limited use.

The ministry also established the detailed Guidelines on the Restrictions of Use of Disposable Products in order to ensure that local governments could conduct systematic checks and inspections of businesses, and implemented reductions on over-packaged products during national holidays, and school admission and graduation seasons.
