Laura and her family live in a big, old flat in the middle of Ha Noi, near the park. The flat has got six rooms, a large kitchen and two bathrooms. There's a living room, a dining-room, a small study and three bedrooms. Her two boys are twelve and ten and share a bedroom; her two girls are eight and six and share another bedroom. The girls like to share a bedroom, but the boys don't. The children all go to an international school where they use English and German in their classes. There are some other Italian and also some English children at their school, but there are also German, French, Japanese and Swedish children, too. It's really international! The school isn't very far from their flat, so Laura's children can all take their bikes to school. There's a good school canteen, so they don't go home for lunch. In the afternoon they can do their homework in small study groups, and then they often have sports activities or music lessons.

1. Laura's family is living far away from the city center.
2. Her children never like to share a bedroom.
3. The school her children go to is an international school.
4. Her children always go home for lunch.
