Three young writers

Dorothy Cartford

When Dorothy Cartford was 35, she found an old notebook in her parents' house. Inside was a story which Dorothy wrote when she was nine. Dorothy couldn't remember writing the story, so she read it again. Then she showed it to her sister, who said, 'You should publish this!' So Dorothy did. Everything was printed in the same way as Dorothy wrote it, even things that were wrong. For example, the title is 'My Visitors' (it should be 'Visitors'). The public loved it, and soon Dorothy was a star!

Thomas Manson

When he was a young boy, Thomas wrote articles for his local newspaper. He also wrote poems, stories and even an opera. He was an extremely good writer, and people loved reading his work. In fact, some people didn't believe it was written by a child at all. They thought his father was the real writer. But actually, his father couldn't read or write at all. Thomas didn't even go to school – he just learned by himself.

Maureen Hunter

Maureen was the youngest of six children, and she used this experience in her books. She changed the names, but it was still possible to recognise her brothers and sisters in her stories, as well as some of her aunts and uncles. Her books were good, but she didn't earn much from them. She wrote her final novel when she was 19, and after she got married, she became a schoolteacher. She helped her pupils to become interested in writing too.

Part 3

Questions 14 – 18

For each question, choose the correct answer.

Using cell phones at school

by Tutu Badega

I love my cell phone. I use it every day to chat with friends. But more than anything else, I use it as a camera. And it's great for writing things that I need to remember, like an appointment with the hairdresser.

When I'm at school, it sometimes helps me, like if I need to add large numbers. I know it can translate words from English into Amharic (my language), but I prefer to ask my teacher what they mean. And I suppose you could use it to learn about countries and capital cities too, if you wanted to.

At some schools, pupils can't use phones at all in class. At mine it's different – the teacher decides. My science teacher says we can't use phones in any lessons with her, so we switch them off. My brother's history teacher is the same. But other teachers say we can use our phones to check things.

However, I do think that some people use their phones too much, especially late at night before going to sleep. Because it's easy to spend hours using your phone, some people do this, and don't have time for things like sport. Some people don't walk to school, but take the bus instead so they can sit and use their phone. It's not good for them.

Next week, we have a No Phone Day at school. Everyone will give their phone to the teacher in the morning and collect it when they leave. I think it's a great idea.
