Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions.

A traditional costume respects a country's culture and helps us distinguish where its wearer is from. Nowadays, many traditional clothes are disappearing and being replaced by modern, Western-style suits, jeans, and other clothes. However, it is still common to observe people in their traditional costumes on national holidays or at special events. Let's take a look at some traditional clothes around the world.

Sari

The sari is commonly worn by Indian women. It is made of a piece of cloth that is 4.5 to 6 meters long. Saris can be worn in many different ways. Women can wear the sari like a skirt or throw the top part over their shoulder. They can also wear it as a veil or a head cover! Working women can wrap the bottom part around their legs like pants.

Ao dai

The ao dai is Vietnam's national costume for women. The costume features wide trousers and a long, tight tunic top. The tunic is split on the sides so that the wearer can move easily. Its color varies depending on the age of the person wearing it. Young girls wear white, and unmarried women wear pastel shades. Married women wear rich-colored tops with simple black or white pants.

Kilt

The kilt is a traditional Scottish cloth worn by men since the 16th century. Usually knee-length, this piece of cloth is wrapped around the man's hips and legs. Each clan uses its own check-patterned design to distinguish itself from other clans. Even today, men can still be seen wearing kilts in both casual and formal situations.

Question 30: What is this passage mainly about?

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions.

The main difference between urban growth in Europe and in the American colonies was the slow evolution of cities in the former and their rapid growth in the latter. In Europe they grew over a period of centuries from town economies to their present urban structure. In North America, they started as wilderness communities and developed to mature urbanism's in little more than a century.

In the early colonial day in North America, small cities sprang up along the Atlantic Coastline, mostly in what are now New America, small cities sprang up along the Atlantic United States and in the lower Saint Lawrence valley in Canada. This was natural because these areas were nearest England and France, particularly England, from which most capital goods (assets such as equipment) and many consumer goods were imported. Merchandising establishments were, accordingly, advantageously located in port cities from which goods could be readily distributed to interior settlements. Here, too, were the favored locations for processing raw materials prior to export. Boston, Philadelphia, New York, Montreal, and other cities flourished, and, as the colonies grew, these cities increased in importance.

This was less true in the colonial South, where life centered around large farms, known as plantations, rather than around towns, as was the case in the areas further north along the Atlantic coastline. The local isolation and the economic self-sufficiency of the plantations were antagonistic to the development of the towns. The plantations maintained their independence because they were located on navigable streams and each had a wharf accessible to the small shipping of that day. In fact, one of the strongest factors in the selection of plantation land was the desire to have it front on a water highway.

When the United States became an independent nation in 1776, it did not have a single city as large as 50,000 inhabitants, but by 1820 it had a city of more than 10,000 people, and by 1880 it had recorded a city of over one million. It was not until after 1823, after the mechanization of the spinning and weaving industries, that cities started drawing young people away from farms. Such migration was particularly rapid following the Civil War (1861-1865).
