Animal mothers

Mothers are very special people. They not only give birth but they look after their children until they're old enough to take care of themselves. Mothers don't stop caring about their children even when they're adults. They want to know that they're healthy, happy and safe. Like humans, animals have got a maternal instinct, too. There are many similarities as well as differences in the way they look after their offspring.

Does your mom drive you to school, your music lesson or sports practice? Can you imagine your mother carrying you and your brothers or sisters on her back all the time? That's what a Surinam toad mum, a species of toad that comes from South America, does when she has babies. A Surinam toad mother carries as many as 100 babies on her back until they're old enough to swim by themselves.

Does your mum tell you to tidy your room and make your bed? Not if you're a orang-utan! Mother orang-utans from Indonesia are the only animal mothers who make a new place for their babies to sleep in each night. They collect fresh leaves, twiges and branches and build their young a bed high in the trees. Mums never let their babies out of their sight for the first two years and after that they keep them close until they're six or seven years old. This is longer than any other mammal spends raising its offspring, except humans.

The world can be a scary and danregous palce, when you're young, even if you're an alligator. That's why mother alligators keep their young in their mouth while they're moving through water or other dangerous places. In the past, when people saw this, they thought the

Good and Bad Dads in the Animal Kingdom

Just like your mom your dad is a special and [1] _____ person in your family. Think of all the things that your dad does for you. Many dads work hard to pay for the things that that families need. They also do many things at home to help look after their children.

Fathers are important in the animal kingdom to. They look after their families and some even look after other families. But some fathers are better than others.

The father emu it's a great dad he finds grass twigs and leaves then he builds a nest for his [2] _____ all by himself. He sits on the eggs until the baby chicks are born. During this time he doesn't eat or drink. When the chicks are born, the dad looks after them and teaches them how to find [3] _____.

The father seahorse gives birth to his young! He does something very special to [4] _____ his future offspring. He carries the eggs in a special pouch on the front of his tail for about 3 weeks until the baby seahorses are born. What an amazing dad!

Lions are fierce [5] _____ and can be really scary our father land protects his family and his family can be big. There can be 7 lionesses (mother lions) and 20 babies in his family. But he isn't really a great dad. He doesn't often hunt for food. The moms have to do that. The father lion likes to sleep a lot, especially on branches in trees. He's lazy!
