Buying a new computer

Today's society is full of pitfalls for consumers, one of which is the plethora of goods available; in the developed world, at least, we are spoilt for (0) choice. So, when you have a desperate (41) _____ to buy something new, how do you go about it? Do you try to get the facts (42) _____ about all the different models before you start shopping? Conventional (43) _____ has it that you should – forearmed is forewarned – but it isn't always that easy. When I needed to replace my old computer recently, I started out with the (44) _____ aim of comparing suitable models on the Internet, but that just confused me. So, against my better (45) _____, off I went to a specialist electronics chain, but they just blinded me with all the possible (46) of memory, graphics tablets, sound cards, and so on. Then I turned to my (47) _____ position where most shopping is concerned – the local department store. There, at last, I got a few straight (48) _____, made my choice and took the (49) _____. So it worked out well, apart from the niggling questions to my (50) about how much I could have saved if I'd persevered with the online option.
