Alexa is built based on natural language processing (NLP), a procedure of converting speech into words, sounds, and ideas. How does it work ?
It then identifies important words to make sense of the tasks and carry out corresponding functions. For instance, if Alexa notices words like "sport" or "basketball", it would open the sports app.	N°
Amazon records your words. Indeed, interpreting sounds takes up a lot of computational power, the recording of your speech is sent to Amazon's servers to be analyzed more efficiently.	N°
Amazon's servers send the information back to your device and Alexa may speak. If Alexa needs to say anything back, it would go through the same process described above, but in reverse order	N°
Amazon breaks down your "orders" into individual sounds. It then consults a database containing various words' pronunciations to find which words most closely correspond to the combination of individual sounds	N°
