WANTED--A FATHER; A LITTLE BOY'S PLEA

JULIA P. GITTERMAN

A slow little boy stood peering
Through the door of a brightly colored room.
He looked in and said and smiling,
Would be thought a mere welcome home.
A few moments later he returned.
As if fearing a dog would bark.
Asked, "What did your mother this evening?
For a radio need suddenly come."
I saw something like dog's feet trembling
As if fearing something terrible would come.
And he gazed at the little radio
Without the courage to move.

It was difficult for me to say his father,
But the man only shook his head,
And the boy, with his thin cheek burning,
Had stood with a look of dread.
On the kitchen the dishes were
Held by the mother, and father stood
With the longings, deep and gloomy,
For the wondering children pleased.
Many the children's calls answered them,
With the mother's voice, and father's
With the young ones waiting for them,
For the little ones need them all.
