A Van Gogh painting showing a midday scene of the French (39) _____ under a dreary sky has been discovered to be something much more interesting than some researchers have thought before.

Apparently, the original colours of the painting have (40) _____ over time, but while the colour of the sky now is a coffee-like brown, it was originally a bright pink shade which was much more vivid. The (41) _____ that the paint had faded to this degree was made while the painting was being prepared for an art show (42) _____ on the artist's relationship with Britain.

When researchers removed the frame from the painting, they actually found evidence of the original colour (43) _____ in the areas which had been (44) _____ by the frame – and most noticeably, the dazzling pink shade of the sky.

"It's just amazing, isn't it," said Karol Edwards, the lead (45) _____ of the museum. "The thing that really fascinates me is that he (46) _____ the effect where the sky is lighter than the landscape, but (47) _____ it is still reflected in any water that you can see – lakes, streams, things like that." It was one of the many natural effects which Van Gogh apparently adored.

(48) _____, the discovery fits in with comments which Van Gogh made in letters dated around the time, including one where he wrote: "I've seen the whole sky coloured pink and bright orange."
